In this way, more flowers participated in luke macgregor's announcement Before and After the 2016 Contest - Continue Reading Below 1 The RHS Back to Nature Garden One of the most anticipated installations this year, the RHS Back to Nature Garden has been co-designed by the Duchess of Cambridge, supported by landscapers Andrée Davies and Adam White. Kate was inspired by her own childhood to create a family forest desert that centers around a house of oak trees similar to a bird's nest. From a stream to paddle to a play area to relax, the garden is designed to attract all ages, encouraging both children and adults to discover the benefits of nature for their physical and mental health. 2 The Welcome to Yorkshire Garden Welcome to Yorkshire celebrates its 10th year at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show with a show garden that is an ything to the county's industrial heritage.

Designed by Mark Gregory, the facility is inspired by waterways in the west of the county, and even features a couple of authentic Yorkshire canal blocking doors donated by the Canal & Canal. River Trust. A trailer path that runs next to a perennial meadow that borders these doors and a lock-in cabin with a private garden beautifully recreates a typical Yorkshire landscape. 3 The Morgan Stanley Garden Never change a winning team: after coming out with the 'Best in Show' award last year, Morgan Stanley returns with a featured garden of shows created by Chris Beardshaw. This year's creation explores the topic of sustainability and shows that it is possible to create grass-rich spaces while managing resources sensitively. With a terrace marked by large topiper domes and winding roads leading to two contemporary relaxation pods, the garden was built with a zero emissions construction vehicle. 4 The Wedgwood Garden Multi-medal gold designer Jo Thompson honours wedgwood's 260th-century history with a charming show garden similar to Etruria, the 18th-century Staffordshire village that Josiah Wedgwood created for his workers. Framed by pavilions and arches, the installation has an elegant and classic atmosphere, enhanced by a bronze wave sculpture 2 meters high. 5 The Savills and David Harber Garden This daring garden of shows designed by Andrew Duff promises the ultimate city-garden experience. It features one of the largest green walls ever seen at THE RHS Chelsea Flower Show - which houses 3,000 individual plants - and a 3.5-metre-high sculpture from a pool of water. The garden aims to celebrate the environmental benefit of trees and plants in urban spaces, and includes vegetation known for eliminating of the atmosphere. 6 The Garden of High Maintenance of Motor Neuron Disease Perhaps one of the most poignant of the whole show, this craft garden is a 'green' metaphor for motor neurone disease. The untended garden reflects the condition of a person suffering from the disease: while the mind and senses are active, the body is in physical decline. Designed by Sue Hayward (also a sports car enthusiast, hence the impressive, hand-built centerpiece), the garden was inspired by an idea by Martin Anderson, who founded the Motor Neurone Disease Association. 7 Walker's Forgotten Quarry Garden Grown in a disused and forgotten quarry, this craft garden is full of redundant industrial elements such as old tires and an excavator bucket. Its aim is to symbolize nature by slowly recovering its space. Sponsored by Walker's Nurseries, the space has been designed by Graham Bodle, who has made four appearances for RHS Chelsea and has previously won the top prize for the craft category. 8 Viking Cruises: The Art of Viking Garden After winning the gold medal last year, Viking Cruises returns to the Chelsea Flower Show with a garden by designer Paul Hervey-Brookes, showing in the 'Space to Grow' category. The water is located in the heart of this garden, a habitat of several-layers wetlands full of river birches and winding streams that revolve around a central sculpture. The design was inspired by the work of Norwegian impressionist Jakob Weidemann and potter Anette Krogstad. 9 Roots in Finland Kyrö Garden After a tour of this Space to Grow garden sponsored by kyrö distillery, visitors might want to plan a trip to Finland, or simply to grab a gin and tonic. Biologist and landscape designer Taina Suonio has created an ideal green oasis for a couple living in Helsinki; The country's national flower, lily of the valley, extends alongside red birches and juniper, whose berries give the gin its aroma. Insect sculptures made of silver by artist Ru Runeberg point to the plantation, and the garden is bordered by a wooden wall depicting urban buildings. 10 The Great Pavilion After touring the show gardens, be sure to fit in a walk through the Great Pavilion, delicious for both the eyes and the nose. Big enough that it could fit 500 parked buses in London, the space will welcome more than 80 exhibitors from the best nurseries in the country, all showing and selling rare flowers, fine plants, botanical creations and gardening tools. There is no like a vase of flowers to add a pop of color to your living room, the endless colors in a field of wildflowers, or the aroma of a fragrant bouquet. People even travel far to witness seasonal flowers, such as cherry blossoms in Japan or tulips in the Netherlands. To give you your daily dose of beauty, we have compiled a list of the 10 most beautiful flowers in the world. You'll want to fill your house with fresh flowers immediately. K It's for Kani The cherry blossom might be Japan's national flower, but it's loved around the world. Up close, delicate petals are a beautiful sight to behold, although the beauty of flowers really becomes apparent from a distance. When you look at thousands of cherry blossoms blooming on a tree, it feels like it's been shot down in some amazing fantasy wonderland. Marisa DeMeglio Many count lilac among her favorite flowers. The bold purple color and elegant white contour ibuy the flower with a royal appearance, in addition to the elongated petals add to the uniqueness of the presentation. Wikimedia The iris flower appears to have been meticulously designed by a qualified artist. Perhaps that's why it was a favorite subject of impressionist painter Claude Monet. Splashes of blue, purple, yellow and white make for a truly unforgettable artistic arrangement. Annie Spratt/Unsplash The palette is one of the most lush and vibrant flowers you'll find, available in a rainbow of colors range from pink and red to orange or white. Some edia petals even have impressive color gradients, such as bright reds that gradually fade into soft whites or precious purples that lighten from stem to tip. Janeb13/Pixibay The bird of paradise is named after a brightly coloured bird with fluffy wings and a slender body. Vibrant oranges, reds and blues make up the stunning wingspan, and the colours really come alive in sunlight. This flower has a beauty and symmetry that is rarely seen, in addition to the radiant colors almost seem to have its own brightness. Sarangib/Pixibay A bright red and orange marigold set against a lush green garden may be one of nature's most beautiful sights. The golden tone of the flower becomes more incredible the closer you get. The unique ridges along the petals, the rich but subtle variations of color, and the cornucopia of the shapes give the marigold an almost hypnotic beauty. Saffu/Unsplash Lotus hardly seems real. The outer petals radiate with vibrant shades of pink and white, while the center's golden stamens provide a visual focal point that brings together the entire presentation. Petals are almost perfectly symmetrical in size, and featured tips add incredible dimension and character. Artem Beliaikin/Unsplash The orchid is in a class by itself due to its unique shape and bold color combinations. While many flowers combine colors using and featured, the orchid plays by its own rules. The beautiful colors are arranged wildly and unpredictable, but the result is always surprising. Providence Providence The elegant petals of turmeric and overlay, the bold coloration and the diverse variety of colors really make the rose the ultimate flower. Claude Monet, Pierre-Auguste Renoir and Paul Cézanne are just some of the iconic artists who have incorporated the rose into their works. If you are looking for the perfect bouquet to say I love you, I miss you, or congratulations, you can not do better than the rose. Rose.
